

LINX 4 JOHN
Tabletop	Best collection of music and sound effects. You can create and save custom soundpads for individual quests.
myNoise	I love the noise, tones, and soundscapes here too. No sound effects though. This is the site with the sounds that make you lose your mind: "Get high without drugs" and "Shephard Madness" . I consider Shephard Madness to be one of my greatest missed opportunities as a DM.
Roll20	This is still an online questing option for us.
Fantasy Western	Some kewl inspo outside of the traditional medieval fantasy genre. Some American west stuff and other things.
Spellbook Generator	This is the website I use most often, the one where if you click the spell it disappears. You can export the spellbook once you've selected the spells, but it makes it into a long pdf with all the spell descriptions included. I like the tight list where if you hover over the spell name the description pops up.
Random Generator - Wizard Spellbook	Still haven't found a random generator that will make books for clerics and druids, etc!
100 Side Quest Hooks : DnD	These one-line hooks are still my favorite way of coming up with a quest idea from the start.
100 Adventure Ideas (DnD Other) - D&amp;D Wiki
Events Table - Google Sheets	Here' something if you end up doing a sandbox or a really long campaign.
Need short adventure? One Page Dungeon!   Sage Advice D&amp;D	These are also a fabulous source of inspiration, or a complete one-off/questicle if you don't have time to prepare yourself. They were also a nice reminder to me that it isn't necessary to plan for every detail, because things can go awry anyway and the magic is sometimes in what you improvise.
Dungeon Contest.Com: Home of the One Page Dungeon Contest	